HISTORY

McNaught took his friend's advice and filed a plat for a town in January of 1894.

McNaught wanted to name the town "Warren" after his friend, but Warren said no, and suggested it should be named after the man who laid out the town. Reportedly McNaught wanted his town to have a short name so he decided to name it after his oldest son, Roy (Baccuss 1995:19). Within two short years the town, which overlaid the main rail that ran right through the heart of town grew exponentially. By 1896 the community had a proper depot, several hotels, warehouses, a school and a variety of small businesses.

McNaught, never lived in Roy but Dr. Warren, settled there with his family and erected the first permanent building, a hotel. That first spring it was booked solid with fisherman. So many, in fact that Warren had to quickly improvise a large pile of old lumber into bunks for additional accommodations (Baccuss 1995:19). The town was on its way to becoming a thriving robust community.
